

rosan helmsley
WEALTH MANAGEMENT

KEY GUIDE | APRIL 2020

Living abroad – the tax rules

Introduction

PLANNING TO LEAVE

The current travel restrictions and grounding of flights due to the Covid-19 crisis will almost certainly have halted plans to work or retire abroad in the near future. Even when things do eventually return to some form of normality, you will still need to consider how Britain's exit from the EU might affect you. The transition period is currently due to end on 31 December 2020, with lifetime rights as EU citizens only available to those who move before then. Even if you plan to move to a non-EU country, the impact of Brexit could be quite challenging to your future financial position.

With plans forcibly on hold, you could use the time to focus on what needs to be done pre-departure, such as researching where to live in your chosen country and relevant visa requirements. And the Covid-19 crisis has shown just how important it is to make sure your finances are secure and that you have good health cover.

Paying adequate attention to financial planning is vital in this major change to your life. The tax consequences of leaving the UK are complex so it is essential that you seek professional advice.

Contents

TAX AS A NON-RESIDENT

How your residence status defines the way you are taxed on income, gains and inheritance

DEFINING YOUR RESIDENCE STATUS

There are complex and specific rules defining whether or not you are a resident

PROPERTY AND BANK ACCOUNTS

What living abroad, or returning to the UK, means for your property, savings and insurance

PLANNING FOR YOUR RESIDENCE STATUS

Ensuring you maintain the residence status you need can require careful planning

Key considerations

THE IMPACT OF THE UK'S DEPARTURE FROM THE EU

Even though there is a bit more certainty following the December 2019 general election, the final departure details are still unknown, with progress slowed due to the Covid-19 crisis. A no-deal departure from the EU is still a possibility. Under the terms of the Brexit withdrawal agreement, settling in an EU country, either working or retired, before the transition period comes to an end will mean that you will retain most of your rights as an EU citizen for life – including the annual uprating of the UK state pension, even if you move before you have reached state pension age.

You and your family may need to apply for residence status to confirm that you became resident prior to 31 December 2020, and you will have until at least 30 June 2021 to do this.

Once the UK leaves the EU, any deal is unlikely to include freedom of movement. Retirees to EU countries could therefore be treated as third-country nationals, and this might affect your ability to obtain residency, purchase property and travel with pets.

- The value of the pound may well fall even further than it already has, increasing living costs if you are dependent on UK pensions and/or rental income from UK property.
- The UK government will probably only uprate the UK state pension for pensioners living in the EU for a transitional period, so its value would then fall in real terms thereafter.
- Healthcare cover may no longer be available, so you would then need to take out appropriate insurance.

The government has issued advice online, which is a good first port of call to consider these issues.

Even if relocating to a non-EU country or moving for work, you need to take account of the possible increased living costs if your income is going to be a fixed amount in pounds sterling.

INCOME TAX

If you remain UK resident despite going abroad, you will pay income tax on all of your income whether it arises in the UK or overseas. If you are employed, you will therefore pay tax on your remuneration regardless of where your duties are carried out.

The general rule if you become non-resident is that you will pay tax on your UK income but will not be liable to UK tax on your overseas income. So, if you are employed, you will not pay UK tax on remuneration for duties performed abroad. Earnings for duties performed in the UK will remain taxable unless they are only incidental to the overseas duties. Other points to consider if you become non-resident include:

- Tax may be deducted at source from your UK property income.
- You will still be entitled to the personal allowance.
- As a non-resident, your UK income tax liability will be subject to an upper limit. The calculation is complex, but the broad effect is that no tax is charged on your UK bank and building society interest or UK state pension provided the personal allowance is disregarded. This limit may be of particular benefit if you are retiring abroad.

It is possible that some of your income could be taxable in the UK and also taxable in the country that you have moved to. However, the worst-case scenario is that you effectively end up paying just the higher of the UK tax or the tax charged abroad.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX

If you are a UK resident then you will pay UK capital gains tax (CGT) on gains from disposing of your assets wherever they are situated in the world.

The tax treatment does not change if you are only temporarily non-resident – essentially when you are away for a period of five years or less. However, if you are non-resident for longer than this, such as when you are retiring abroad, the general principle is that you are not liable to UK CGT even in respect of assets situated in the UK.

Any UK residential property you retain remains liable to UK CGT despite you being non-UK resident, although only gains accruing since 6 April 2015 (when this rule was introduced) are taxed when the property is sold. The availability of principal residence relief is also restricted, so if you are non-UK resident it will not normally be possible to exempt a UK property from CGT by claiming that it is your main residence. Similar liability has been extended to UK commercial property from 6 April 2019 (with an option to rebase the value of the property at that date so that prior gains are not taxed on a subsequent sale).

Be warned that even when UK assets are exempt from CGT, tax may be payable in your new country of residence, and this could be higher than the CGT that would have been paid in the UK.

INHERITANCE TAX

Unlike income tax and CGT, the determining factor with inheritance tax (IHT) is your domicile.

Your domicile is essentially the country that is regarded as your natural or permanent home. You can only have one domicile, which is normally, but not always, the country of your birth. You can change your domicile, but usually with some difficulty. And even if you do manage to change your UK domicile, for IHT purposes you will be deemed to still be UK domiciled for a further three calendar years.

- You are likely to retain your UK domicile for your whole life, even if you live abroad for long periods.
- If you are domiciled in the UK then you will be liable to IHT on gifts of assets wherever those assets are situated.
- Many countries charge IHT (or its equivalent) based on residence, so when you die your estate may be liable both in the UK and also abroad. There is tax relief from the double charge, but if you are retiring abroad you might think about changing your domicile status.
- If you do change your domicile status, then you should be careful if you are married or in a civil partnership. If both of you are UK domiciled, gifts between you are exempt from IHT. But if one of you is non-UK domiciled, the exemption is limited to a lifetime total of £325,000. You can elect for the non-domiciled spouse or partner to be treated as UK domiciled just for IHT purposes, so avoiding the restriction – but making the election does have other IHT implications.

If you own property abroad it can be a good idea to have one will to deal with your UK assets and another to deal with the assets situated abroad. If you do not make a new overseas will, then any assets that you have abroad may end up being passed on according to the inheritance laws of the country in which you are living. But be careful, as the last thing you want is for the new overseas will to result in your existing UK will being revoked.

Planning point

You should consider your long-term plans for living abroad – will you return to the UK, or stay overseas for the rest of your life? This decision will affect how you make your estate plans.

WHAT ABOUT YOUR UK PROPERTY?

If you are a UK homeowner, you must decide what to do with your property before going abroad. Even if you could afford to, simply leaving it empty could be in breach of your mortgage agreement and may invalidate your household insurance. Also, you will likely have to pay council tax despite your property being empty. Even worse, the rate of council tax payable once a property has been empty for two years can be increased by up to 100% (200% if empty for five years). Each council can set its own charges and discounts, so you need to check what applies to your property.

If you decide to sell your property, you should allow plenty of time to do so – although if the sale has not been completed before you leave, you can give power of attorney to your solicitor or to a relative or friend. The housing market could be slow to pick up even once the Covid-19 crisis is on the wane.

If you decide to rent the property out, you will normally still be liable for income tax if the rent (minus certain allowable deductions) exceeds your personal allowance (when combined with other UK source income). Your letting agent will normally be required to deduct tax at source and pay it to HM Revenue & Customs (HMRC) unless it agrees otherwise.

BANKING, SAVINGS AND INVESTMENTS

Even if you are moving abroad permanently, until you are properly settled in your new homeland you should consider keeping a UK bank account open and at least one credit card, because in some countries it can be difficult to borrow before you have an established credit history there.

Anyone returning to the UK at some point in the future should definitely keep their UK bank accounts open. This is because you will not be able to open a new account without a UK address. Many UK pension schemes will only make payments into a UK bank account, so you should plan for this if your pension is going to commence after you leave. However, the state pension can be paid into either a UK bank account or an account in the country where you are living.

You will almost certainly want to open a local currency bank account in the country that you move to, but you might also decide to set up an account in a well-regulated offshore centre. The latter should provide 24-hour internet banking, multi-currency facilities and mortgages.

You can retain any existing individual savings accounts (ISAs) if you become non-resident, but will not be able to make any further investment. It is also possible that despite being exempt in the UK, the income from ISAs might be taxable in the country that you move to.

Becoming an expatriate will also provide you with access to a range of tax-efficient financial planning opportunities such as offshore pensions and investment bonds. But these should be considered in conjunction with professional advice to ensure you pay due attention to currency and taxation issues, and achieve an appropriate level of risk, diversification and flexibility.

If you are returning to the UK you should take advice regarding the disposal of investments prior to your return. Depending on your circumstances and, in particular, the amount of time you have been away, considerable tax savings might be possible.

Planning point

One good reason for retaining UK property is the introduction, from 1 April 2021, of a 2% stamp duty land tax surcharge for non-UK residents buying residential property in England and Northern Ireland. This surcharge will catch expatriates moving back home

INSURANCE

If you have individual life assurance, critical illness cover or income protection insurance, it is essential that you establish whether it will remain valid overseas. Your insurer may decide to remove your cover or increase your premium if it feels that your move makes you an increased risk. Similarly, if you are going to be working overseas, you should check with your employer whether you will be covered for death in service and whether you have private medical insurance.

If you are not covered for private medical insurance via your workplace, you should take out an individual international private medical insurance policy. Much will depend on local state medical facilities, because in some countries these are of a much higher standard and are far more accessible to expatriates than in others. Make sure your medical insurance covers you for diseases such as Covid-19.

RESIDENCE STATUS

Your residence status is the main factor determining your continuing liability to UK tax, and this is established using a set of statutory tests.

It is worth gaining a basic understanding of what you will need to consider if you are thinking of leaving the UK to live abroad – or if you have been abroad and are now returning to the UK.

For both situations you can minimise the amount of UK tax that you will have to pay if you plan well ahead. There are three aspects to the statutory residence tests, with the starting point being whether you are automatically non-resident or automatically resident. If neither of these apply, your residence status will be determined by how closely you are still linked to the UK.

Automatically non-resident in the UK

There are some situations where you will automatically be treated as non-resident in the UK, and you then do not need to consider any of the other tests. The most relevant tests if you are leaving the UK are:

- Whether you stay in the UK for fewer than 16 days during the tax year. For instance, if you are retiring abroad and do not make any return visits.
- Whether you leave the UK to work full-time abroad. This can be on an employed or self-employed basis, with full-time defined as working an average of more than 35 hours each week. You can visit the UK for up to 90 days each year, of 30 of which can be days where you are working. A working day is defined as one where you work more than three hours.

Automatically resident in the UK

These tests will be more relevant when you are returning to the UK, but you could also find yourself treated as resident in the UK after you have moved abroad. The most relevant tests for being automatically treated as resident in the UK are:

- Whether you stay in the UK for 183 days or more during the tax year.
- Whether your only home is in the UK – very broadly, you must have that home for a period of more than 90 days, and must live there for 30 days during the tax year.

If you leave the UK to live abroad the second test is unlikely to be relevant because you will almost certainly have an overseas home as well as any UK home.

Sufficient UK ties

If neither of the automatic tests apply, your residence status for a particular tax year will be determined by what is known as the sufficient UK ties test. This test will typically be applied if you have retired abroad, but your return visits to the UK mean that you are not treated automatically as non-resident.

The more days that you spend in the UK during a tax year, the fewer UK ties you are permitted before being treated as resident.

If you are leaving the UK to live abroad the following ties are relevant:

1. Do you have a spouse, civil partner or minor children in the UK?
2. Do you have accommodation in the UK which is made use of during the tax year?
3. Will you work in the UK for 40 days or more during the tax year?
4. Were you in the UK for more than 90 days during either of the two previous tax years?
5. Will you spend more time in the UK than in any other country during the tax year?

The answer to the fourth of these (the 90-day test) will almost certainly be 'yes' when you are leaving the UK, but you should have some control over whether the other ties apply. When you return to the UK after living abroad the fifth tie (more time in the UK than in any other country) can be ignored.

To ascertain your residence status for a particular tax year, you need to compare the number of days you spend in the UK during that tax year with how many UK ties you are permitted before being treated as resident. The relationship between days and ties is set out in the table on page 7.

This is a very simplified explanation to give you some idea of how residence status is determined, and you need to be aware that most of the residence tests are subject to very detailed rules.

Planning point

Your residence status must be determined separately for each tax year. Even if you are treated as remaining resident in the UK after going abroad, you may be able to take appropriate measures to change your status for subsequent years.

Days in the UK during the tax year	When leaving the UK	When returning to the UK
16 to 45 days	Resident if 4 UK ties or more	Non-resident
46 to 90 days	Resident if 3 UK ties or more	Resident in 4 UK ties
91 to 120 days	Resident if 2 UK ties or more	Resident if 3 UK ties or more
121 to 182 days	Resident if 1 UK tie or more	Resident if 2 UK ties or more

RESIDENCE PLANNING

With careful planning you can become non-resident when you move abroad. If you have UK ties, such as a house in the UK, then it is easy to establish how many days you can safely stay in the UK each tax year. If you need to be in the UK for a set number of days each year, then you will know if you have to reduce your number of UK ties – maybe selling your UK house or reducing the amount of time you work here.

Permitted days in the UK

You should not assume that you can spend the same amount of time in the UK every tax year.

You might be in the position to stay for up to 120 days during a particular tax year. However, a stay of more than 90 days could trigger the 90-day UK tie, meaning you would be permitted fewer days in the UK for the next tax year.

Minimising the number of working days

You will need to be careful when it comes to days working in the UK, given the three-hour definition of a working day.

The number of working days could be kept to a minimum if your work is condensed into full days rather than you working half-days of just over three hours each. Alternatively, it might be possible to keep the amount of work done each day below the three-hour limit.

Consider each tax year separately

An important point to remember is that there is no averaging between tax years – each year is considered entirely separately.

If your number of UK ties means you can stay in the UK for up to 90 days each year, then spending 95 days here during one tax year and 85 days the next would make you resident for the first year. Delaying five days of visits so you spend 90 days in the UK each tax year would mean non-residence status for both years.

A day in the UK is any day where you are here at midnight. However, days spent in the UK for exceptional circumstances beyond your control, such as if you have to extend a visit due to serious illness, do not normally count.

How to notify HMRC

You will have to notify HMRC of your residence status, and this will normally be done as part of your tax return submission.

For the tax year in which you leave the UK, you might be due a tax refund, especially if you were employed here. This is because you will have an unused portion of your personal allowance and income tax bands between the time your employment ceased and the end of the tax year. If a tax return is not completed, it will be necessary to submit form P85 ('Leaving the UK – getting your tax right') either online or by post to HMRC.

Planning point

Even if you stop paying UK tax, consider whether it's worth continuing to pay national insurance contributions to maximise your entitlement to the UK state pension at retirement age. You need 35 years of contributions to qualify for full pension entitlement.

HOW WE CAN HELP

Moving abroad is a particularly complicated area where specialist help is essential.

You will need the right advice about your potential liability to tax and the most appropriate ways to minimise the tax impact. If necessary, we can liaise with any accountant or tax specialist that you might use in the country that you move to.

We can also help you with investment and tax planning advice if you are about to become non-resident for tax purposes, or are thinking of returning to the UK.

rosan helmsley
WEALTH MANAGEMENT

Rosan Helmsley Ltd, 1000 Cathedral Square,
Cathedral Hill, Guildford, Surrey, GU2 7YL

01483 90 40 40 | www.rosan-ifa.com

Rosan Helmsley Ltd is authorised and regulated by the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA).